5 ways to make visible learning at home

Reminders offer simple suggestions of what family members can say or do to encourage children to deepen and share their thinking, learn from and with others, and take greater ownership of their learning.

5 THINGS YOU CAN DO TO MAKE LEARNING VISIBLE AT HOME

Don't answer, ask a question!

When your child asks you a question, don't give the answer. Instead, ask, "What do you think?".

Encourage group learning at home!

Ask your child to come up with answers or solutions together with siblings, friends, or classmates. You can also turn some homework into family homework and learn together.

Write it down!

When your child creates special artwork, ask him or her to tell you about it. Write down what your child says and store the documentation with the artwork. Or write a short quote from your child below the work itself and frame it all together.

Take pictures!

Take pictures of your child playing at home, helping you cook, chatting or doing anything! Print out the pictures and discuss them with your child. Ask questions like "Tell me about this". "How did you feel doing this? Why did you choose to do this?". Document what your child says during reflection time.

Extend learning!

When your child is really excited about a school project or takes an intense interest in something, take some time to research it further together in the right place, through books or the Internet.
